

Product Designer Competitive

Description

Your Role We're on the lookout for a talented Product Designer to join our team and be dedicated to crafting cutting-edge tools for high school athletics. As the technology landscape in American high school sports evolves, Hudl is at the forefront, integrating video and data into practices and games. In this role, youâll: Focus on the customer. Youâll shape, conduct and translate user research to help the team understand latent needs beyond the basics of what users say they want, digging deeper into the âwhyâ behind user feedback. Youâll create actionable insights that will help drive physical and digital product experience strategy and design. Be a visual and verbal storyteller. Youâll craft and communicate compelling concepts that are forward-facing, differentiated, and relevant to customer and business needs. Add clarity to ambiguous problem spaces. Youâll tease out the important characteristics of users, their environments, and the marketâs expectations to support prioritized and intuitive experiences. Collaborate. By forming close partnerships with multi-disciplinary counterparts in Engineering, Product, Design, Scrum and Quality, youâll help define requirements and deliver clear and focused digital user experiences. Design process, quality and delivery. Youâll advocate for tactility, accessibility, customer needs and design excellence, all as you shepherd your project to release. After delivering on-time solutions, youâll measure and own the results of how well those solutions address design and product needs. For this role, we're currently considering candidates who live within a commuting distance of our offices in Lincoln or Omaha, Nebraska. But with our flexible work policy, there aren't any current requirements for the number of days you come to the office. Must-Haves Strong communicator. You thrive in a collaborative environment that fosters open and honest communication. You have excellent presentation skills and can confidently sell ideas based on solid rationale and objectives from cross-functional teams. Youâre comfortable being respectfully blunt when giving and receiving feedback. Iterative prototyping skills. Youâre proficient at using low and high fidelity prototyping tools and wireframing techniques based on the needs of the project. A problem-solver. You have the ability to think critically and holistically about user interactions, and can address complex design challenges to provide innovative solutions that factor in technical, business and design constraints. Organizational skills. You can assess the appropriate level of design and research necessary to achieve your goals, with a plan to reach final deliverables. Technical proficiency. Youâve used modern component-based design software (e.g., Figma and Adobe Creative suite) and tools like Miro to workshop concepts and drive alignment with remote stakeholders. A robust portfolio. Youâre able to showcase a variety of projects that demonstrate your expertise in UX design, including examples of user flows, wireframes, prototypes and final design solutions. Nice-to-Haves Research and insights experience. Youâve planned and conducted qualitative and quantitative user research, and know how to translate insights into actionable product and design outcomes. Youâre adept at using various research methodologies to optimize the end user experience. A sports enthusiast. You understand the unique challenges and opportunities within the sports technology industry. Growth mindset. Youâre committed to staying up-to-date with industry trends, emerging technologies and design best practices, and have a strong desire to continuously learn and evolve. Our Role Champion work-life harmony. Weâll give you the flexibility you need in your work life (e.g., flexible vacation time, company-wide holidays and timeout (meeting-free) days, remote work options and more) so you can enjoy your personal life too. Guarantee autonomy. We have an open, honest culture and we trust our people from day one. Your team will support you, but youâll own your work and have the agency to try
