

Culture Reporter

Description

HuffPost is a subsidiary of BuzzFeed, Inc. As part of our esteemed news organization, HuffPost is a leading source of award-winning news and commentary for the most diverse and connected generation everâwith reporting spanning across politics, lifestyle, entertainment and more. HuffPost believes in putting people before power and telling the stories that too often go unheard, from the voices that matter Business Area: ContentJob Category: HuffPost Salary: $76,537.00- $78,000.00 USD Union Status: Union This position is covered by a collective bargaining agreement between the HuffingtonPost and Writers Guild of America East. BuzzFeed Inc. is committed to fair and equitable compensation practices. We reserve the ability to adjust the final compensation for this role based on the final candidate's experience, skillset, certifications, and geography. The Role HuffPost is seeking a Culture Reporter who can provide sharp and quick pop-culture reporting and analysis, own our weekly entertainment newsletter, and help grow our regular audience for culture coverage. This team is based in New York City, but we are also open to remote applicants. You Will Keep up with an entertainment calendar to cover TV/film/music etc. in a timely manner. Generate creative takes on the most talked-about entertainment stories, with an original angle. Identify and cover emerging trends and social media moments and help define HuffPost as a destination for that topic. Produce clean and structurally sound reporting and criticism. Contribute news items and/or analysis for tentpole events including awards shows, heritage months, anniversaries, and other big moments in the pop-culture space. Ideally, be comfortable with occasionally representing HuffPost at events and in the press. Work with the audience team to package stories in smart and creative ways: sharp headline writing, SEO optimization, art and graphics selection, social media promotional language, etc. Part of what makes BuzzFeed a pioneer in digital media is our commitment to exploring new ventures that lead to spreading truth and joy. As such, you may be asked to share your knowledge with your colleagues through presentations or trainings, to screen and interview job candidates, or to take part in recruitment or networking events on behalf of the company and be part of a union. You Have Previous experience as a culture reporter with a demonstrated record of relevant, high-quality work on your beat or an equivalent field. A big appetite for stories about TV, film, music, celebrity, and broader entertainment news stories. Passion to tell stories about diverse voices and communities and be able to add valuable analysis to complex news and issues that matter to HuffPost readers. Ability to parse through the viral stories on social media to highlight and smartly engage with the topics that everyone is talking about. Interest in how the business of Hollywood can affect our readers and why they should care. A fun and curious spirit about culture and entertainment and can work independently and collaboratively.
